A little known fact...

The village owes its existence to a court settlement on October 23, 1802, when John Shergold won his encroachment case that his house was outside the New Forest boundary and therefore in "no man's land"

For some years Nomansland also made a nice little side income by smuggling brandy from France. Smugglers operated in companies and one such company of ten men used the out-of-the-way village of Nomansland as its headquarters.

The historic Lamb Inn in Nomansland was built in 1881, the pub is famous for originally straddling the Hampshire and Wiltshire county border, allowing patrons to hop between bars to exploit different closing times.

NOMANSLAND

Local Landmarks...

Langley wood - Believed to have been an integral part of the royal hunting grounds established by King William in the 11th century

Long beech - An area that was a wartime airfield during the Second World War - one of 12 such airfields in the New Forest during that period.

Pipers wait - The "Wait" Meaning: In medieval terminology, a "wait" was a town musician or watchman. The name historically suggests a high vantage point where a piper or lookout could survey the landscape.
