A little known fact...

The village owes its existence to a court settlement on October 23, 1802, when John Shergold won his encroachment case that his house was outside the New Forest boundary and therefore in "no man's land"

For some years Nomansland also made a nice little side income by smuggling brandy from France. Smugglers operated in companies and one such company of ten men used the out-of-the-way village of Nomansland as its headquarters.

The historic Lamb Inn in Nomansland was built in 1881, the pub is famous for originally straddling the Hampshire and Wiltshire county border, allowing patrons to hop between bars to exploit different closing times.
